

Reason for the Season is still here

By John Carpenter

At this time of the year a familiar phrase that I often hear is, "Christmas has become too commercialized, people seem to forget the real meaning of Christmas." I can understand how this perception comes about. I would imagine if you drove around you would probably see more plastic Santa Clauses and reindeer in yards than you would see Manger scenes.

But I'm not sure this observation is completely right. My memories of Christmas have always been very happy, and it has nothing to do with receiving gifts (I've always had more fun giving a gift than receiving one.) My happiness comes from watching other people during this season. People seem to become more light hearted, more generous, happier and more outgoing. Families come together and appreciate each other. Friends get together and enjoy each other's company. Even strangers wish each other a Merry Christmas.

All Christian religions celebrate Christmas as the birth of Christ, and urge us to bring "Joy to the World." And I truly believe that everytime you give a small gift, offer a Christmas greeting, or even smile at someone, you are doing your part in bringing "Joy to the World." So I would disagree with those that criticize what Christmas has become. Most people, whether they realize it or not, do celebrate the true meaning of Christmas through their actions at this festive time.

So a special thank you goes out to everyone who has decorated their homes for me to see, to everyone who has sent me a card, and to everyone who has given me a Christmas greeting. You've already made this year a happy one, and I can't wait until next week.

(If you would like to help this season, there are two Angel Trees in town. One is at the Econ-O-Mart, and the other is in Community Bank. Just select a gift request from the tree, and drop the gift off at Community Action. They would like the gifts by this Friday if possible, but will accept them up to Christmas. Also, the Gazette is working with the school in gathering gifts for children. If you have something you would like to give, feel free to drop it off at the Gazette Office and we'll get it to the school.)

Donnie Orr to assume Police Chief duties

By Jim Rudisill

Assistant Police Chief Donnie Orr will assume his new duties as Columbus Junction Police Chief when current Police Chief Marlin O'Donnell retires December 31. The city council approved the appointment during its regular meeting December 9, according to Mayor Dan Wilson. Wilson said O'Donnell, who announced his retirement in August, had worked over 18 years for the city. Orr has worked about 17 years for the city, Wilson added.

Orr is expected to take his oath of office on December 30. Normally the council would be meeting on the fourth Wednesday of the month, which would be December 23, but because of Christmas, the council has moved the meeting back.

Wilson said the city has an additional small stipend that is paid for the police chief's position, but there is no set salary for the position. Wilson said the council did not take any action on the stipend when it approved Orr's appointment, but he believed that issue would be discussed at the beginning of the year.

In other action, the council approved a resolution that will establish a sick leave reimbursement policy for retiring city employees. Wilson said he developed the policy after learning O'Donnell would be retiring. Under the policy, an employee who retires with at least 10 years of service to the city and has reached the Iowa Public Employees Retirement System (IPERS) retirement age of 55, would be eligible to receive $50 per day for any unused sick leave. An employee with 15 years of service and at least 55 years old, could receive a $100 per day reimbursement for any unused sick leave. Wilson said employees can accumulate up to 120 days of sick leave. The policy goes into effect immediately.

In final action, the council approved a letter to the Federal Emergency Management Administration, objecting to new flood maps that have been developed. The maps have drawn criticism from many local governments because of apparent discrepancies between the elevations they project for future flooding events and the level of floodwaters that were recorded during the 2008 flooding.

During a meeting earlier this year, the council met with John Meyer, French-Reneker Associates, Fairfield, and agreed to compose a letter objecting to the new maps. City officials and Meyer said the new maps identified areas of the community as within the 100-year flood zone even though they were dry in 2008. Meyer said most descriptions he had seen for that flood identified it as a 500-year event. During an earlier meeting with other local officials in Wapello, Meyer and the Columbus Junction officials had reported similar complaints from other communities.

H1N1 Vaccines to be available to all Iowans beginning December 14th.

LOUISA County continues to encourage those at highest risk of complications to make sure they are vaccinated.

Vaccine allocations have increased; therefore it is possible to expand the people eligible to be vaccinated past the initial target priority groups to the general population.

Children who are 9 years of age and under should be sure they receive two doses of the H1N1 vaccine in order to provide complete protection against the virus.

H1N1 is not gone.

While Iowa continues to see a decline in influenza-like illness, H1N1 continues to circulate in Iowa.

Public health officials predict another wave of H1N1 illness will occur after the holidays. This would coincide with what is typically the time Iowa sees the highest rates of influenza activity - January and February.

It's not too late to be immunized.

Being immunized as soon as possible will get LOUISA County residents protection against this possible third wave of illness. It will also prevent them from spreading this virus to other.

Being immunized now will offer protection over the holidays, when many LOUISA County residents travel.

Louisa County Public Health has both H1N1 and seasonal flu vaccine available and will hold additional vaccination clinics throughout the county during the next week. Please check your local paper for clinic dates and locations.
